7 UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
8 WESTERN DISTRICT OF WASHINGTON
9 AT SEATTLE

10 JESSE RODRIGUEZ, on behalf of himself and 11 all others similarly situated,

12 Plaintiff,

13 v.

14 EVERGREEN PROFESSIONAL
15 RECOVERIES, INC.,

Defendant.

CASE NO. C19-0184-JCC

ORDER

16 This matter comes before the Court on Plaintiff's motions for class certification and final 17 approval of the settlement (Dkt. No. 52) and attorney fees (Dkt. No. 53). Having thoroughly 18 considered Plaintiff's briefing and the relevant record, and having held a fairness hearing on June 19 23, 2021, the Court hereby GRANTS the motions for the reasons explained herein.

20 I. BACKGROUND

21 Plaintiff Jesse Rodriguez was issued a driving ticket in 2018. (Dkt. No. 1 at 3.) When he 22 failed to pay it, Seattle Municipal Court hired Defendant Evergreen Professional Recoveries to 23 collect the debt. (Id. at 3.) As part of its collection efforts, Evergreen requested Mr. Rodriguez's 24 credit report from TransUnion. (Id. at 3–4.) In response, Mr. Rodriguez filed this class action 25 lawsuit, alleging that Evergreen requested his credit report (and others') for an improper purpose
26 in violation of the Fair Credit Reporting Act ("FCRA"), 15 U.S.C. § 1681 et seq. (Id. at 7–9.)

1        After Mr. Rodriguez filed the complaint, the parties engaged in discovery for 2 approximately one year. (Dkt. No. 52-1 at 19.) On February 20, 2020, Evergreen moved for 3 summary judgment and for the Court to deny class certification. (See Dkt. Nos. 39, 42.) Five 4 days later, the parties participated in mediation with retired King County Superior Court Judge 5 Paris Kallas and reached a settlement agreement. (See Dkt. No. 48 at 3.) The parties notified the 6 Court of the settlement on March 6, 2020 and moved for preliminary approval two months later.
7 (Dkt. Nos. 45, 48.) On July 8, 2020, the Court concluded that it would likely be able to certify 8 the following class for settlement purposes:

9        All natural persons residing in the United States whose consumer report as defined 10 by 15 U.S.C. § 1681a(d) was obtained by Evergreen, from TransUnion LLC, for 11 the purpose of collecting a debt arising out of any driving ticket violation in the United States. The class excludes all persons who have filed for bankruptcy. The relevant class period is March 23, 2018 to present.

12       (Dkt. No. 51 at 2–3.) The Court also preliminarily approved the settlement and approved the 13 parties' proposed class notice. (See id. at 2, 4.)

14       Several months later, Mr. Rodriguez moved for class certification, final settlement 15 approval, and attorney fees, but he did not provide absent class members with notice of the 16 attorney fee motion and did not include his attorneys' billing records, which made it impossible 17 for the Court to evaluate the fairness of the settlement or the reasonableness of the attorney fees 18 with the level of scrutiny the Ninth Circuit requires. (See Dkt. No. 54.) Mr. Rodriguez has since 19 supplemented the record and provided additional notice to the absent class members. (See Dkt.
20 Nos. 55-2, 60.) No class members have opted out of or objected to the proposed settlement, and 21 none appeared at the fairness hearing. (Dkt. No. 60-1 at 3.) Mr. Rodriguez now moves for the 22 Court to certify the class for settlement purposes, approve the settlement, and award his counsel 23 attorney fees and costs.

1      II. DISCUSSION

2      A. Class Certification

3      The Court concludes that the class should be certified for the following reasons:

- 4      1. The class of 248 consumers is “so numerous that joinder of all members is impractical.” Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(a)(1); see Dkt. No. 52-1 at 9.
- 5      2. There “are questions of law and fact common to the class,” including whether Evergreen requesting class members’ credit reports violated the FDCPA and, if so, whether that violation was willful. Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(a)(2).
- 6      3. Mr. Rodriguez’s claim is typical of the absent class members’ claims. Fed. R. Civ. P.
23(a)(3).
- 7      4. Mr. Rodriguez and his counsel have adequately protected the interests of the class.
Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(a)(4).
- 8      5. The common questions of law and fact predominate over questions affecting only individual class members and a class action is superior to other methods for fairly and efficiently adjudicating the class members’ claims. Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(b)(3).

9      In its motion to deny class certification Evergreen argued that the Court should not certify 10     the class because individualized damages issues predominate. (See Dkt. No. 42 at 7–8.)

11     Specifically, Evergreen argued that the only actual damages Mr. Rodriguez and class members 12     seek are invasion of privacy damages and that each class member would be required to prove 13     emotional distress to recover those damages. (Id.) But even assuming without deciding that 14     Evergreen is correct, individualized issues regarding actual damages have no bearing on whether 15     the class should be certified for purposes of settlement because the FCRA allows for statutory 16     damages, which do not depend on class members establishing actual damages or emotional 17     distress. See 15 U.S.C. § 1681n(a)(1)(A). Therefore, the Court certifies the class for settlement 18     purposes.

19     //

1                   B. Settlement Fairness, Attorney Fees, and Incentive Award

2                   To determine whether the settlement is fair, reasonable, and adequate, the Court must 3 consider whether “the class representatives and class counsel have adequately represented the 4 class,” “the proposal was negotiated at arm’s length,” “the relief provided for the class is 5 adequate,” and “the proposal treats class members equitably relative to each other.” Fed. R. Civ.
6 P. 23(e)(2). Having considered these factors, the Court concludes that the settlement agreement 7 is fair, reasonable, and adequate.

8                   First, the agreement was negotiated at arm’s length after seven hours of mediation 9 involving Judge Kallas. (See Dkt. Nos. 52-1 at 6, 55-2 at 4.) Second, the relief provided for the 10 class is adequate. Each class member will receive roughly $112 in statutory damages. (See Dkt.
11 No. 60-1 at 3.) Although this is at the low end of the $100–$1,000 range for statutory damages 12 under the FCRA, it is an adequate recovery in light of the risks of proceeding with the litigation.
13 If the class were to proceed with the litigation and fail to establish that Evergreen violated the 14 FCRA “willfully,” they would not be entitled to statutory damages and could recover only actual 15 damages. See 15 U.S.C. §§ 1681n(a)(1)(A), 1681o(A). But there is no evidence in the record 16 suggesting that any of the class members suffered any actual damages. Indeed, in discovery Mr.
17 Rodriguez was unable to identify actual damages he suffered with any degree of specificity. (See 18 Dkt. No. 43-2 at 5, 9.) Further, Evergreen argued in its motion to deny class certification that the 19 Court could not certify a class of individuals seeking only actual damages in this case. (See Dkt.
20 No. 42.) If the Court were to conclude that Evergreen did not act willfully and were to agree that 21 a class of individuals seeking only actual damages could not be certified, the class members 22 would be left to litigate their actual damages claims on their own, which would likely not make 23 rational economic sense unless their actual damages were unusually large. Therefore, this 24 recovery is adequate in light of the risks of proceeding with the litigation.

25                   Two aspects of the proposed settlement give the Court pause. First, as the Court
26 explained in its previous order, which the Court incorporates by reference, Mr. Rodriguez’s

1 attorneys seek between 68% and 73% of the amount Evergreen is willing to pay to settle. (See 2 Dkt. No. 54 at 3–4.) Second, some of the language in Mr. Rodriguez’s briefing could be 3 interpreted to mean he seeks to recover $1,000 in statutory damages while the other members of 4 the class will recover only around $112. (See Dkt. No. 53-1 at 4.) Despite these concerns, the 5 Court concludes that Mr. Rodriguez and class counsel have adequately represented the class and 6 that, with one adjustment explained below, the settlement will treat class members equitably.

7       1. Attorney Fees

8           The Court starts with attorney fees.<sup>1</sup> As the Court explained in its previous order, the 9 settlement agreement here contains two “subtle signs that class counsel have allowed pursuit of 10 their own self-interests and that of certain class members to infect the negotiations.” In re 11 Bluetooth Headset Prods. Liab. Litig., 654 F.3d 935, 947 (9th Cir. 2011) (“Bluetooth”).
12 Specifically, the proposed agreement awards Mr. Rodriguez’s attorneys a disproportionate share 13 of the settlement and includes a clear sailing provision, in which Evergreen agreed not to 14 challenge Mr. Rodriguez’s fee request. While these features are disfavored, they do not 15 automatically render a proposed settlement unfair. Briseño v. Henderson, 2021 WL 2197968, 16 slip op. at 9 (9th Cir. 2021). But when they are present, the Court may not approve the settlement 17 absent “a clear explanation of why the disproportionate fee is justified and does not betray the 18 class’s interests.” Bluetooth, 654 F.3d at 949.

19           The disproportionate fee award is justified in this case. Every class action comes with 20 certain baseline costs, such as the cost of drafting the complaint, conducting discovery, and 21 moving for class certification, among others. While some of these costs may vary with the size of 22 the class, there is not always a direct relationship. For example, the cost of drafting the complaint 23 in this action would likely have been roughly the same regardless of whether there were 248
24 class members or 248,000. Similarly, the cost of responding to Evergreen’s motion to deny class

26       1 The Court analyzes the reasonableness of the fees requested under Rule 23(e)(2) and Rule 23(h) simultaneously.

1 certification would likely have been the same regardless of the size of the class. As a result, the 2 size of the class often has a significant impact on the portion of the recovery that must be 3 allocated to attorney fees. When the class is small, as it is here, these costs almost invariably 4 consume a larger portion of the recovery than they would if the class were larger. This effect is 5 compounded when the recovery for each class member is relatively modest.

6 If the Court were too aggressive in disapproving settlements with small classes because 7 of disproportionate fee awards, plaintiff's lawyers would be discouraged from representing small 8 groups of people who have been harmed and then those individuals would be left without a 9 feasible option to vindicate their rights. Therefore, rather than create a bright line rule, the Ninth 10 Circuit has instructed district courts to determine whether plaintiffs' attorneys' hourly rates are 11 reasonable and whether they expended a reasonable number of hours litigating the case. See 12 Briseño, 2021 WL 2197968, slip op. at 8. If they did, the Court may approve the settlement, even 13 if the fee award is disproportionate.

14 Mr. Rodriguez and the class are represented by two attorneys, who charge $475 per hour 15 and $400 per hour. (See Dkt. No. 55-2.) To determine whether those rates are reasonable, the 16 Court must look to the prevailing rates for attorneys of similar reputation and ability in the 17 community in which the Court sits. See Johnson v. Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Studios, Inc., 2018 18 WL 5013764, slip op. at 7 (W.D. Wash. 2018). Ordinarily the party requesting fees must 19 demonstrate the prevailing rate, but the Court may also rely on "its own familiarity with the legal 20 market," Ingram v. Oroudjian, 647 F.3d 925, 928 (9th Cir. 2011), and "rate determinations in 21 other cases, particularly those setting a rate for the plaintiffs' attorney," United Steelworkers of 22 Am. v. Phelps Dodge Corp., 896 F.2d 403, 407 (9th Cir. 1990). Based on those factors, the Court 23 concludes that Mr. Rodriguez's attorneys' rates are reasonable. See, e.g., *Rodriguez v.
24 AllianceOne Receivables, Inc.*, Case No. C15-1224-RAJ, Dkt. Nos. 60-2 at 5–6, 70 (W.D. Wash.
25 2019) (approving rates of $450 per hour and $350 per hour for Plaintiff's attorneys when they 26 were less experienced).

1        After reviewing the billing records, the Court also concludes that the hours Mr.
2 Rodriguez's attorneys worked is reasonable, except for two hours that relate only to Mr.
3 Rodriguez's claims against TransUnion, which were dismissed and did not lead to this settlement
4 with Evergreen, and 0.7 hours purportedly spent reviewing the Court's two-and-a-half page order
5 regarding discovery and depositions (Dkt. No. 4) and a half-page notice of withdrawal of counsel 6 (Dkt. No. 30). (See Dkt. No. 55-2.) The Court finds that the hours related only to TransUnion are 7 not relevant to the present settlement and that a reasonable amount of time spent reviewing those 8 orders was no more than 0.3 hours. Therefore, the number of hours reasonably expended was 9 153.2 for Mr. Marcus and 12.3 for Mr. Zelman. (See Dkt. No. 53-5 at 4.) Multiplying those hours 10 by their reasonable rates results in a total fee award of $72,770 for Mr. Marcus and $4,920 for 11 Mr. Zelman for a total of $77,690. (See id.) Mr. Rodriguez's attorneys' request for $73,520 in 12 attorney fees is reasonable, particularly since they chose not to seek separate reimbursement for 13 roughly $10,000 in costs they incurred. (See Dkt. No. 55 at 3.)

14        2. Incentive Award

15        The remaining issue is the proposed $2,000 payment to Mr. Rodriguez. His attorneys 16 characterize this payment differently in different places. At the outset of their motion for attorney 17 fees they characterize the payment as consisting of two amounts: $1,000 "for his statutory 18 damage" and a $1,000 incentive payment "in recognition for his services to the Settlement 19 Class." (Dkt. No. 53-1 at 4.) By the end of the motion, they characterize the full amount as an 20 "Incentive Award." (Id. at 11.) The distinction is significant because the Ninth Circuit has held 21 that "special rewards for counsel's individual clients are not permissible," Staton v. Boeing Co., 22 327 F.3d 938, 976 (9th Cir. 2003), and Rule 23(e)(2)(D) requires the Court to consider whether 23 the proposed settlement "treats class members equitably relative to each other." Mr. Rodriguez 24 receiving $1,000 in statutory damages while every other class member receives $112 without any 25 justification for the difference would not meet these standards. At the same time, the Ninth 26 Circuit has held that reasonable incentive awards are permissible if they are "intended 'to

1 compensate class representatives for work done on behalf of the class, to make up for financial 2 or reputational risk undertaken in bringing the action, [or] to recognize their willingness to act as 3 a private attorney general.”” Roes, 1-2 v. SFBSC Mgmt., LLC, 944 F.3d 1035, 1057 (9th Cir.
4 2019) (quoting Rodriguez v. West Publ’g Corp., 563 F.3d 948, 958–59 (9th Cir. 2009)). Thus, 5 the full $2,000 payment may be permissible if it is an incentive award and is reasonable based on 6 Mr. Rodriguez’s service to the class. The Court concludes that Plaintiff’s counsel’s initial 7 description was an error and that the full amount of the payment is an incentive award because 8 Plaintiff’s attorneys also refer to the payment as an “incentive award” in their supplemental 9 briefing. (See Dkt. No. 55 at 4.)

10 According to Plaintiff’s counsel’s representations and the billing records, Mr. Rodriguez 11 spent roughly 15 hours assisting with discovery, discussing and attending mediation, and 12 otherwise communicating with his attorneys. (See Dkt. Nos. 53-1 at 11–12, 55-2.) They also 13 represent that Mr. Rodriguez is a small business owner “who was forced to take time from his 14 business” when assisting class counsel for the class’s benefit. (Dkt. No. 55 at 4.) Without this 15 service, the class likely would have recovered nothing. Accordingly, the Court concludes that an 16 $1,888 incentive award is reasonable for Mr. Rodriguez’s service to the class. When the $1,888 17 incentive award is added to Mr. Rodriguez’s $112 in statutory damages, he will receive a total of 18 $2,000.

19 III. CONCLUSION

20 For the foregoing reasons the Court GRANTS Plaintiff’s motions to certify the class, 21 finally approve the settlement, and award attorney fees (Dkt. Nos. 52, 53).
